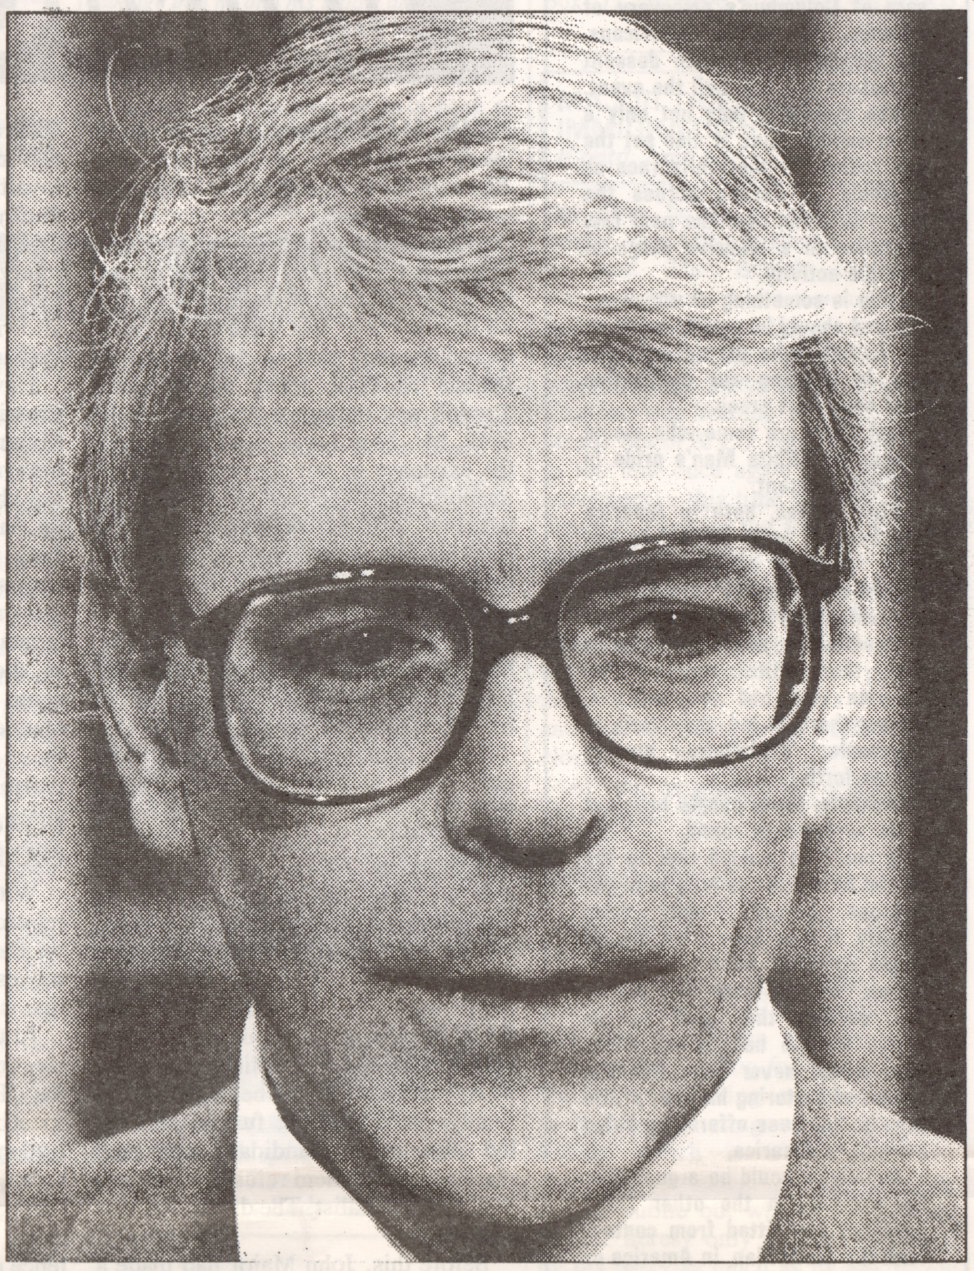
RACE

The issue they thought they'd buried returns to haunt the Government



A NERVOUS PREMIER

Mr. Major is clearly apprehensive that the issue of Immgration and Race is now about to return to centre stage in British politics in the 1990s – after the parties of Westminster, acting in collusion, managed to bury it in the decade before. His recent speech in Luxembourg, in which he called on European leaders to co-operate in bringing in 'curbs' on Third World immigration, was obviously a cynical ploy to halt the nationalist challenge by fooling the public into thinking he was about to 'act tough' on the immigrant invasion.

PRIME MINISTER John Major acknowledged the likelihood of the return of the race issue to the forefront of British politics in a remarkable speech he made at the EC summit meeting in Luxembourg on June 28th, in which he warned European leaders that they would have to take steps to place firm curbs on Third World immigration if there was not to be a revival of what he called the "far Right" in Britain and across the Continent.

Referring to the fact that a thousand people a week were now seeking asylum in the UK, Mr. Major said: "If we fail in our control efforts, we risk fuelling the far Right, something we saw in Britain in the mid-seventies and have kept in check."

Mr. Major's speech was in fact a thinly veiled acknowledgement of three basic facts which we have reiterated in this paper: (1) that Tory promises of immigration curbs made in the 1979 election were designed to lull the British public to sleep on the issue; (2) that the promises have not been honoured and, as a result, the public is getting restless again; (3) that as a result of this, nationalism is again on the upsurge in Britain in the form of the British National Party.

THE WAVE OF THE FUTURE?

The British National Party on the march. After a lean period in the 1980s, when nationalists found it extremely difficult to win more than tiny public support, the BNP is now leading the nationalist resurgence in Britain by picking up greatly increased votes at elections in London, the East Midlands and Lancashire, as well as gaining new members faster than ever. When Mr. Major talks of a failure to curb immigration "fuelling the far Right," it is mainly the BNP he has in mind.

THE NEED FOR A NEW WHITE IMPERIALISM

NEXT YEAR is the 500th anniversary of Columbus's discovery of America. All normal Americans, and people of European descent elsewhere too, will hail the event.

The discovery was not only a great achievement; it also set the ball rolling for the white race as a whole to expand across the globe, as it did over the next few centuries in a massive surge of creative activity.

This is something of which we can and should be proud, not least we British, who played so big a role in planting our civilisation over such vast areas.

But there are some who would oppose the White Man's pride in this achievement.

Sick Whites, both in America and beyond, have started to get up a wave of agitation against proposed Columbus anniversary celebrations in the United States.

Needless to say, their gripe is that the white conquest of America was bad for the non-Whites there. It led, they wail, to 'oppression', 'exploitation', slavery and so forth.

Actually, these people have got it the wrong way round.

It could be argued that in the United States in the long term the Negroes gained hugely from slavery. It was none other than a Negro ex-slave, Booker T. Washington, who pointed out earlier this century that back in his native African habitat the Black Man would never have had the chance of bettering his way of life than he had been offered by being brought to America.

Equally, it could be argued that the Whites, on the other hand, have not benefitted from contact with the Black Man, in America or anywhere else.

The exploitation of non-Whites by the Anglos in North America and the Spaniards to the South was bad not so much for the former as for the latter. It was this system in fact that constituted the fatal weakness in the colonial practice of the White man everywhere.

It is the source of South Africa's dire problems today. It is also the source of the immigration problems which, now that the Whites have scuttled their empires, are threatening them in their own metropolitan countries.

Too often, white conquerors, whether in Africa, Asia or the Americas, put economic greed before the interests of race. A faster buck could be had from the use of cheap non-white Labour than from the developing of the newly-won lands solely by the Whites themselves.

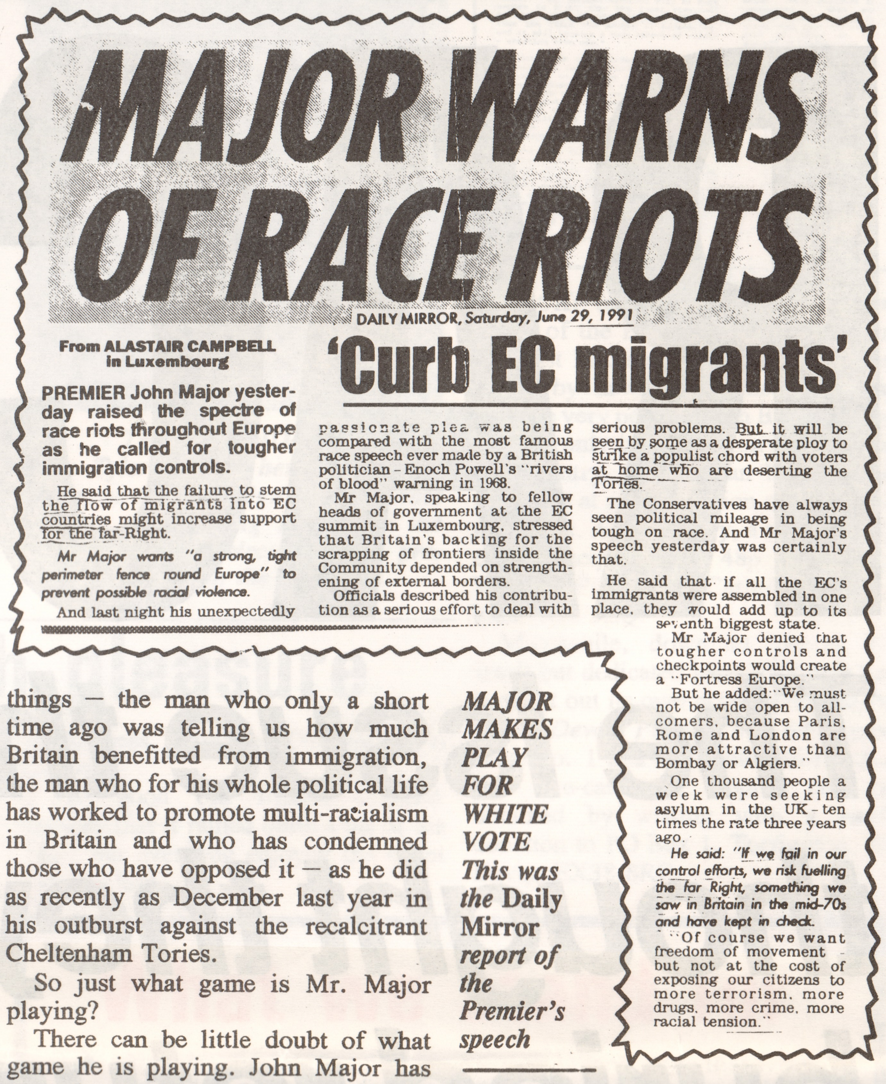
But none of this makes imperialism wrong in itself. Without the new lands won by the Whites from the non-Whites, Britain and Europe would be intolerably overcrowded. We need the living space and resources of some of the non-European regions.

In particular, we in Britain and Europe should think of Africa — a continent whose vast wealth is largely going to waste as its natives fail totally to put it to good use. Eventually, there is no alternative but for the White Man to resume control of Africa — or at least a large part of it.

But the next time we should not make the mistakes that were made in the past. The next time we should bring about total segregation of white and non-white races, with each living in their own areas and with the white economies dependent not only on white brains but on white labour as well.

As the natives start to get restless again...

MAJOR TRIES NEW IMMIGRATION 'CON'



MAJOR WARNS OF RACE RIOTS

DAILY MIRROR, Saturday, June 29, 1991

From ALASTAIR CAMPBELL in Luxembourg

'Curb EC migrants'

PREMIER John Major yesterday raised the spectre of race riots throughout Europe as he called for tougher immigration controls.

He said that the failure to stem the flow of migrants into EC countries might increase support for the far-Right.

Mr Major wants "a strong, tight perimeter fence round Europe" to prevent possible racial violence.

And last night his unexpectedly passionate plea was being compared with the most famous race speech ever made by a British politician - Enoch Powell's "rivers of blood" warning in 1968.

Mr Major, speaking to fellow heads of government at the EC summit in Luxembourg, stressed that Britain's backing for the scrapping of frontiers inside the Community depended on strengthening of external borders.

Officials described his contribution as a serious effort to deal with serious problems. But it will be seen by some as a desperate ploy to strike a populist chord with voters at home who are deserting the Tories.

The Conservatives have always seen political mileage in being tough on race. And Mr Major's speech yesterday was certainly that.

He said that if all the EC's immigrants were assembled in one place, they would add up to its seventh biggest state.

Mr Major denied that tougher controls and checkpoints would create a "Fortress Europe."

But he added: "We must not be wide open to all-comers, because Paris, Rome and London are more attractive than Bombay or Algiers."

One thousand people a week were seeking asylum in the UK - ten times the rate three years ago.

He said: "If we fail in our control efforts, we risk fuelling the far Right, something we saw in Britain in the mid-70s and have kept in check.

"Of course we want freedom of movement - but not at the cost of exposing our citizens to more terrorism, more drugs, more crime, more racial tension."

MAJOR MAKES PLAY FOR WHITE VOTE This was the* Daily Mirror report of the Premier's speech

JOHN MAJOR has — or at least used to have — a copy of The Eleventh Hour prominently displayed on his bookshelf.

Whether, since he has become Prime Minister, he has had the book moved to a more discreet place in his library we do not know. But what we do know is that through that book, written by British National Party leader John Tyndall and outlining the aims of the BNP, Mr. Major will be well aware of the existence of our movement and of its political objectives, including the banning of all further non-white immigration into Britain and the repatriation of those non-Whites already here.

And there can be no doubt that Mr. Major is deeply worried about the prospect of the BNP emerging to become a national force in the 1990s.

John Major has hated racial patriots ever since he entered parliamentary politics back in 1979. In the general election of that year he was returned as the candidate for Huntingdon. In the course of the Huntingdon campaign, he was invited, along with all the other candidates, to take part in a discussion in the town, with members of the public asking the candidates questions. When he arrived he found that there was a nationalist candidate present, who was known to be opposed to immigration. Without further ado, he led the other candidates off the platform, all of them refusing to debate with the nationalist. The discussion was cancelled.

Before this, John Major had made a name for himself in Lambeth as a local Tory Party man and later as councillor. In 1968 Enoch Powell dropped his famous bombshell when he made his 'Rivers of Blood' speech denouncing immigration, whereupon the then Tory leader Edward Heath ordered a purge from the party of all known Powell supporters. And who was it who led the purge from the Lambeth Branch? Why, John Major!

From then on John just went upward and upward. At the end of 1988 we found him giving an interview to the far left journal Marxism Today in which he said that the event that had moved him the most within that year had been the Hindu Festival of Light, which he had attended, and which he described as "a very significant spiritual festival." It illustrated, he continued, "how much Britain benefits from the enormous richness of the various cultures and traditions of its citizens."

BUILDING CREDENTIALS

British Nationalist remarked at the time that Major, having established his credentials as a staunch supporter of the multi-racial invasion of Britain, was obviously destined for promotion. We were not wrong, for within a year he was appointed Foreign Secretary. By this time, again not wrongly, the media were predicting that Major was the one most likely to succeed Mrs. Thatcher as leader of the Tory Party.

Major eventually achieved the Tory leadership and the premiership into the bargain, having had a spell as Chancellor of the Exchequer on the way. He was neither a distinguished Foreign Secretary nor a distinguished Chancellor, but these things didn't seem to matter.

What mattered was that Major had proved himself, right from early days, a good 'liberal', a 'wet' who was willing to toe the line laid down by the 'liberal establishment', which is internationalist and multi-racialist in its loyalties. As his statement to Marxism Today (an odd publication for an aspiring Tory politician to be giving interviews to — or is it?) shows, Major thoroughly approved the policy of allowing non-white immigration into Britain.

Having become Tory leader and Premier at the end of last year, Mr. Major wasted no time in showing that his sympathies with multi-racialism had not changed. Cheltenham Tories woke up one morning shortly afterwards to find that a West Indian had been imposed upon them by the party's Central Office as prospective parliamentary candidate for the constituency in the next general election. When some of them protested against this manoeuvre, they were publicly attacked by — yes, you've guessed it — new party leader and Premier Major!

POACHER TURNS GAMEKEEPER

With a record like the one we have related here, Mr. Major would seem to be the last person to be calling for moves to curb immigration. But no — that is precisely what he is now doing!

At the European Community summit meeting in Luxembourg on June 28th, the Premier made an astonishing speech in which he urged European leaders to recognise the need for firm controls to be placed on further immigration from the Third World. He called for "a strong, tight perimeter fence round Europe" which he stressed as being necessary to prevent possible racial violence.

Why this dramatic departure from everything that John Major appears to have stood for for his whole political life? A possible hint was provided by one passage which he used in his speech to underline his appeal for tougher immigration controls. This was when he said that: "If we fail in our control efforts, we risk fuelling the far Right, something we saw in Britain in the mid-1970s and have kept in check." And he went on to say: "Of course we want freedom of movement — but not at the cost of exposing our citizens to more terrorism, more drugs, more crime, more racial tension."

Mr. Major's linking of immigration with terrorism, drugs and crime will sound to many like a 'racist' statement. It is a statement that a spokesman for the British National Party would not be reluctant to make. It is a statement of the kind that we have regularly made in British Nationalist over the years — only to be condemned for our 'racist' attitudes. But now we find John Major, Prime Minister, saying such things — the man who only a short time ago was telling us how much Britain benefitted from immigration, the man who for his whole political life has worked to promote multi-racialism in Britain and who has condemned those who have opposed it — as he did as recently as December last year in his outburst against the recalcitrant Cheltenham Tories.

So just what game is Mr. Major playing?

There can be little doubt of what game he is playing. John Major has seen the writing on the wall: he is realising that, once again, as in the late 1960s at the time of the Powell speech and as in the mid-1970s at the time of the emergence of what he has called the 'far Right', the British natives are getting restless and are sick and tired of immigration and its consequences and are demanding action to stem the flood.

THATCHER'S PROMISES

The Tories read the same signs in the wind when the 1979 general election approached. Then what Mr. Major has called the 'far Right' and what we simply call the nationalist movement (in fact we have nothing in common with either the Left or the Right in the old sense of those terms) had become a powerful force in Britain and was threatening to take many votes away from both Tory and Labour Parties. The Tories' nostrils sniffed out what an electoral advan-tage might be gained from the adoption of a 'tough' posture on race and immigration. Mrs. Thatcher, then leader, spoke of the fear British people had of being 'swamped' by alien cultures. Her party spoke of firm 'controls'. The electorate believed the Tories and switched their votes from nationalism to Maggie Thatcher. Maggie triumphed in the election and the nationalist movement (then represented mainly by the National Front) experienced a setback from which it was to take a decade to recover.

Of course the Tories never intended for one second to honour their pledges about immigration control; it was all pure rhetoric — a load of bluff, cynically adopted to pick up votes and head off the challenge of nationalism.

As the eighties got under way and it seemed that the nationalist wave had come and gone, with votes for nationalist parties reaching derisory levels and little evidence of any strong nationalist presence on the streets, as had been demonstrated in the big marches and rallies of the 1970s, the Tories conveniently ditched their promises on immigration. The migrants continued to pour in. Not even when multi-racialism was seen breaking down by means of the appalling inner-city riots of the 1980s did the Tory Government take any decisive measures to tackle the problem. As long as nationalism did not show any sign of re-emerging as a force and as a threat to the established order, nothing was done. Mr. Major's own words tell the tale: the nationalist challenge had, by means of Mrs. Thatcher's postures and promises, been "kept in check." Everyone could go back to sleep.

But during the past year or so all this has changed.

Neither Mr. Major nor his government ministers, nor the Tory Party,

CHINESE TRIAD GANGS ABOUT TO HIT BRITAIN

New terror on the way

A NEW WAVE of criminal terror from the East is about to hit Britain.

This is the warning of a senior Scotland Yard detective from the Metropolitan Police Chinese Intelligence Unit. Unit Detective Superintendent James Boocock fears that the Chinese Mafia-style criminal secret societies known as the Triads will expand their activities in Britain in the run-up to 1997, when Hong Kong reverts to China, as thousands of the colony's citizens hop it to this country.

The Triads live off Chinese communities everywhere. They are involved in drug-trafficking, prostitution, loan-sharking and blackmail. Much of the profits are ploughed into buying property and building up business empires in the countries where Chinese communities have been allowed to set up shop.

Already four Triad gangs have what Mr. Boocock estimates as "hundreds of members" in London, Birmingham, Glasgow and Liverpool. But they are now pushing much further afield.

RUTHLESS TERROR

Chinese are kept in line by means of ruthless terror. Mr. Boocock warned that Triad leaders had "no compunction in resorting to extreme violence in order to punish, intimidate or impose their will on vulnerable Chinese businessmen."

In Cardiff there is some evidence of protection rackets. The Riverside area is thought to be a base for Triad activity, and just recently the city centre witnessed violence from this quarter when a fight broke out over a woman.

Portsmouth, too, is now thought to be a Triad base, and Triad networks appear to have pushed across Hampshire, including small towns. As well as Southampton, Lee-on-Solent and Winchester have seen acts of physical terror linked to the Chinese Mafia, including one murder.

Det. Supt. Boocock spoke of Britain having been "gripped by organised crime in its purest form" —comparable only to the activities of the provisional IRA.

Police efforts to carry out investigations are hampered by a wall of silence from the Chinese community. Chairman of the Chinese Association in Portsmouth, David Lai, said he was not aware of any Triad activity in the area for three years. But, if this is so, it is hard to see why top Hampshire detective, Chief Inspector Bill Lawton, should have gone out of his way to warn of a likely Triad presence.

Said DCI Lawton: "I would be surprised if they were not operating in the city."

There is no doubt that a part of this silence is due to fear. But equally, many Chinese have reason to regard the Triads as benefactors. A major Triad activity is the smuggling in of illegal immigrants, to enjoy the benefits of life in Britain and the West. Some Chinese businessmen are no doubt afloat on Triad loot — if not actually Triad 'Mr. Bigs' themselves.

It would not be surprising if many young Chinese looked to these crime syndicates for their rôle-models. It was reported in the Yorkshire Post some years ago that young Pakistanis in Bradford took just this attitude towards the leaders of the drug gangs in that city. But whatever the ins and outs of the matter, Chinese immigration is likely to bring more of the same.

SOMETHING WE CAN DO WITHOUT

Britain can do without the kind of situation that has already arisen from oriental immigration in the United States. As shown by the cold-blooded slaughter of three Whites during a hostage-taking in a store in Sacramento, California, the violence of these gangs sooner or later spills over into the white community.

The only preventive measures to be taken are a firm No to more immigration, whether from Hong Kong or elsewhere, and a determined reversal of this tide by means of wholesale repatriation.

SCOUTS WILL NOW MEET IN MOSQUES — OFFICIAL

BRITAIN'S SCOUTS could soon be meeting in mosques and reciting the Scout Promise according to Allah, says County Commissioner Derek Ringer. In a bid to appease the 'ethnic communities', the Scout movement has decided to scrap its Christian image for good. An 'Ethnic Communities Development Worker — West Indian Cathy Ross — has been appointed at National Scout Headquarters. Mr. Ringer added that the Scout movement was "responding to the needs of a multi-cultural society" and that in future new recruits could be making their promises "to God, Allah, or whatever."

Who's a doctor and who isn't?

A BOGUS Pakistani 'doctor' who examined pregnant British women and authorised seven abortions has been jailed for only 33 months at the Old Bailey. Rakesh Sood, 29, a failed medical student, was assisted by his British girlfriend, Helen Cowie, who acted as his receptionist at his 'Quickslim Diet Clinic' in Thornton Heath, South London.

Judge Nina Lowry said the offences of impersonating a doctor were grave. Sood had been thrown out of medical school in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, but managed to become registered as a doctor by the General Medical Council after producing a forged diploma stating that he had qualified in medicine in South Africa.

After the trial, a spokesman for the pressure group Patients' Rights said: "This case highlights a disturbing number of foreigners entering the country with false qualifications. There are now so many Asian doctors in the NHS it is impossible to say which ones are genuine and which ones are bogus."

Jewish leader seeks further gags on free speech for Britons

THE NEW PRESIDENT of the Jewish Board of Deputies, Judge Israel Finestein, has called for changes in the law which would make it easier to bring prosecutions for stirring up 'racial hatred'.

Judge Finestein said that he wanted to see a "lesser standard of proof" required by law, making it a crime to say or write things that may provoke hatred. At present the Public Order Act of 1986 requires that racial hatred is intended or "likely" to be stirred up.

This, it appears, is not good enough for Judge Finestein. Although it has for centuries been traditional in British law for proof of a crime to be established before an accused can be convicted, the Judge wants that principle to be thrown out of the window, or at least partially so — hence his "lesser standard." Guilty until proved innocent, perhaps?

No doubt after the triumph of his brethren in getting Britain's laws changed to prosecute alleged 'war criminals', the Judge thinks that he has only to command and it will be done.

Just who the hell do these people think they are?

REWRITING ROBIN HOOD

NOTTINGHAM'S extreme left-wing Labour Council has adopted a Pakistani immigrant, Mr. Shaukat Khan, as this year's Sheriff of the city. Last year's Sheriff of Nottingham was a West Indian.

A spokesman for Nottingham Residents' Action Group said: "This decision is outrageous — what are foreign tourists going to think when they arrive to find an Asian is the Sheriff of Nottingham? This will do untold damage to Nottingham's tourist industry, which has already been hit by recession."

RED COALITION

Last year Nottingham City Council became the first Labour-Communist coalition in Britain when Britain's only Communist councillor, John Peck, held the balance of power on a hung council. Left-wing extremists then elected a West Indian as Sheriff. Now the left has been strengthened by a bigger Labour representation, caused by the anti-poll tax backlash. It is rumoured that the Left wants to adopt a Hong Kong immigrant as the town's official 'Robin Hood'.

Local schoolchildren are already being given literature showing black and Asian characters among Robin's Merry Men — a historical impossibility since the first Third World immigrants did not arrive in Nottingham until well after the end of the Second World War!

The NRAG spokesman added: "It seems as if each new immigrant group that arrives is being offered some sort of political trade-off by Labour. It's a racial merrygoround."

SA liberal has second thoughts

FOR MANY YEARS, world-famous South African heart-surgeon Christiaan Barnard was an opponent of his country's system of separate development for its various races. But now that this is breaking down, Professor Barnard is unhappy about the consequences and seems to be having some second thoughts.

The unrest and violence among Blacks themselves as white authority has decayed have brought him to the point of emigrating.

Speaking just recently, Barnard, who campaigned for the release of convicted terrorist Nelson Mandela, let it all hang out. "I really did think that Mandela would prove himself a worthy and sensible leader," he said. "But it seems to me the ANC is planning to lead South Africa down the same tragic path taken by most other African countries." He added: "I honestly believe the black leadership here is determined to fly into the face of history. I can only assume it is for their own personal ambition and gain that they do not give a thought to the so-called 'masses' or what really happens to the country."

With a further air of discovery, Barnard continued: "Everything I have I have worked hard for. That work ethic seems to be lacking [among Blacks]. The black leaders are saying simply that power will mean the Blacks can just take over what they see the Whites have. The fact that people have worked very hard for what they have doesn't seem to penetrate."

This lament was prompted by a recent ANC demonstration outside Barnard's holiday home in the Cape, demanding that such houses as his should be handed over to the 'masses'.

Said Barnard further: "It's no good shouting about exploitation [as the ANC do]. The mines, the farms, the roads, the whole infrastructure of this beautiful country has been built by white people and their expertise. That is a fact."

At the age of 68, Professor Barnard has in fact just started to discover what his fellow Afrikaners have known for three and a half centuries. This is why they instituted their Apartheid system, and why it was so necessary.

As it is, Professor Barnard, having as a

THE ISLE OF MAN

Pro-queer move sparks outrage

FEELING is running high in the Isle of Man.

The European Convention on so-called 'Human Rights' is now about to be used in an effort to force the independent-spirited Manxmen to drop their ancient ban on homosexuality. The Home Office is acting as the Eurocrats' messenger boy in relaying the order to them.

Until now, the Manx people, descendants of the tough Vikings who conquered their island more than a thousand years ago, have run a tight ship. Through their parliament, the Tynwald, they have sought to uphold the ancient liberties of freemen against the degeneracy of the modern age.

Hanging remained on the Manx statute book for longer than anywhere else in the British Isles. Birching is still available to the island's courts for hooligans and muggers. Criminals and misfits are looked upon with the kind of hostility and suspicion that prevailed everywhere in the country before it became liberal, permissive and decadent. A spirit of law and order and public decency still survives in the Isle of Man to a greater degree than anywhere else in the UK.

The Isle of Man, where there are very few homos prepared to get public or pushy, since their perversions are still punishable by imprisonment, has, not surprisingly, been spared the disgusting AIDS plague that has infested the rest of Britain.

The free-spirited Manx folk don't intend to give in to the Eurocrats without a fight. The island's House of Keys, lower house of the Tynwald, voted to uphold the ancient local laws. Said member of the House, Mr. Edgar Quine: "Buggery is an abominable, offensive act. If we start giving this sort of thing a veneer of legality it will run rampant."

More of this attitude is needed throughout Britain if the contemporary decadence is to be fought and beaten and the spiritual health of the nation restored. So British Nationalist wishes the Isle of Man the very best of luck in its effort to resist the queer infection.

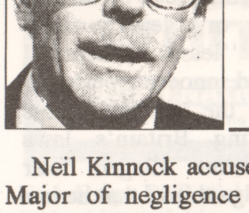
KINNOCK-MAJOR ROW OVER BANK FRAUD SHOWS PARLIAMENT THAT HAS FORFEITED ANY RIGHT TO NATION'S RESPECT

THOSE who still retain reverence for our institutions of parliamentary 'democracy' ought to tune in on TV or radio occasionally to follow the debates in the House of Commons. What they will see (or hear) will be an exhibition more fitting to a children's kindergarten.

Typical was the argument between Government and Opposition leaders on the 23rd July over the question of responsibility for the BCCI bank scandal. This confrontation at times reached the level of hysterics, as the two shouted at each other across the House.



THE TWO ANTAGONISTS
Shouting at each other across the House like hysterical children

Neil Kinnock accused Premier John Major of negligence by refusing to move earlier to protect the bank's investors, and said: "Wasn't your failure to act on the knowledge you had a complete dereliction of duty?"

Mr. Major, his face, according to one later press report, "white with anger," charged Kinnock with indulging in "opposition by smear." He continued: "If you are saying I am a liar, you had better say so bluntly. If you aren't then you had better stop insinuating it."

Major followed this with a further barrage: "You have just revealed to this House," he said to Kinnock, "that you are unfit to be in government."

"Now their hate shows," said the headline in the Daily Express the next morning.

ZOOLOGICAL NOISES

But Kinnock and Major were not the only players in the piece. The TV report of the clash showed the general level to which things in the 'Mother of Parliaments' have sunk. With each verbal thrust by the leading protagonists there was an outburst of zoological noises from both sides of the House, respectively signifying approval and protest. A study of the faces was even more instructive. From the expressions of those sitting by the sides of their leaders one would imagine that the whole thing was just a gigantic kiddies' game rather than a serious discussion of important national affairs.

And the debate over BCCI was only one of many that proceed in this fashion regularly in the Commons. The gesturing and screaming, the heah heahs, the insults, the squawks from the back benches and the pathetic appeals by the Speaker for "Order, order!" are all almost everyday fare for anyone who cares to watch or listen.

We have no sympathy whatever with the Government over the BCCI affair. The whole business reveals monumental incompetence, if not something worse. Most certainly, the scandal should be the subject of an extensive enquiry.

But perhaps even more depressing than the scandal itself was the atmosphere in parliament in which it was debated. When one witnesses these bear garden antics, one cannot be surprised at the abysmal state of national affairs in Britain — in almost all departments.

What it amounts to is that we have political institutions wholly unfitted to manage the affairs of a great nation. And we have people running those institutions who are incapable of running a card party. Their daily behaviour proves it.

Well might we echo the words of Oliver Cromwell as he dismissed the Rump Parliament: "You have been here too long for all the good that you have done. In the name of God, go!"

Annihilated in the tests: now why not pick a team of genuine Brits?

THE TEAM of cricketing chumps peculiarly listed as 'England' have been thrashed again by the West Indies, after being similarly thrashed by the Aussies a short time before that.

The 'England' label is of course ridiculous, since in almost every recent test there have been at least two West Indians playing in the side. In the latest debacle at Edgbaston, when 'England' collapsed with scarcely a fight, their bowling was opened by Phil De Freitas and Chris Lewis. Another member of the side was Mark Ramprakash — not exactly one with deep roots in these islands. When Lewis has not been sharing the new ball, it has been bowled by Devon Malcolm, yet another West Indian.

All this is apart from players like Alan

'Friendly fire' verdict: why whitewash of US?

AN OFFICIAL ENQUIRY last month cleared all British forces personnel of any blame for the deaths of nine British soldiers killed by fire from US aircraft in the Gulf War, and by implication established clearly that responsibility lay with the Americans.

However, the Ministry of Defence board conducting the enquiry refused to spell out this conclusion by acknowledging that it was an American error that resulted in the men's deaths, preferring to class its finding as an 'open verdict'.

Several of the parents of the dead men were furious at this decision, one referring to it as a 'cop out'. Said one of them, Peter Atkinson, whose 19-year-old son Paul was one of the victims: "They (the MoD) are cowards in my view for not using plain language and blaming the Americans, since it sticks out from the report that they are to blame." Said another parent, Mrs. Anne Leech, who lost her son Kevin (21): "The report is a cop-out. I am disgusted. It has let the Americans off the hook. They should stand up and say they are at fault. The British Government should make them." Terry Satchell, whose son Stephen (18) lost his life, said: "The report makes it absolutely plain that it was pilot error, but the Government won't be honest about it. It looks as though they are trying to appease the Americans by not making them take responsibility for their mistake."

This paper sympathises wholeheartedly with these parents in their anger. All we would add, however, is that there should be no great surprise at the Government's pusillanimous attitude. It can always be predicted that a British Government — and particularly a Tory Government — will do anything rather than risk displeasing America. The grovelling subservience of successive generations of British leaders towards the United States has been one of the most humiliating and nauseating features of the 20th century.

YOUR LETTERS

Sir, — I would like to thank the BNP for its wholehearted support for the Loyalist majority in Ulster. As an Ulsterman and Loyalist, I am sure I speak for all of us when I say that, although we have been treated as second-class citizens by the Government, we really appreciate the firm support of the BNP.

But I would be glad if British Nationalist could highlight the latest move to merge the UDR with the Royal Irish Rangers. It means that the Republicans have had just one more of their wishes granted by courtesy of Westminster: the destruction of the UDR.

Surely, a shoot-to-kill policy is something that should be adopted, not outlawed and with those suspected of it branded as 'criminals'.

K. GIBSON
Portadown, N. Ireland

Sir, — The editorial of July's Searchlight reports that on the 4th June no less than seven police officers raided, searched and plundered the home of Mr. Colin Jordan, following a complaint from Labour's Shadow Foreign Secretary Gerald Kaufman.

What heinous act or threat to our national security could Mr. Jordan be suspected of to effectuate such a heavy police operation? Was he dealing in hard drugs? Or perhaps hiding guns and explosives for some imminent IRA mainland campaign? Not quite. Searchlight explains that Kaufman "claims Jordan sent him anti-Jewish hate material."

Having no knowledge of the nature of the alleged material, I can comment no further than to ask that, however offensive Mr. Kaufman may have found it, should not such a senior and presumably hardened politician, aspiring to the office of Foreign Secretary, be thicker-skinned than to run crying to the police whenever something in his postbag is not to his liking?

Far more disturbing, however, is Searchlight's lamentation that: "...police failed to find the mailing list for his hate sheet Gothic Ripples or other sensitive letters." This raises very serious questions. Why on earth were the police looking for a mailing list? What possible relevance could this have to any investigation into Kaufman's complaint? And how come the editor of Searchlight is privy to so much information about the aims and results of this extraordinary police operation?

It should be a matter of urgent concern to anyone, whatever their political persuasion, that apparently our police forces can be mobilised in this bizarre fashion on what seems no more than Gerald Kaufman's whim.

Sir, — On a TV news programme one morning last month came the depressing news that some of the famous Welsh male-voice choirs that have given us so much joy over the years may have to close down.

The reason? Fewer and fewer young singers are joining the choirs, and as a result the latter are not replacing the older ones who are retiring. One elderly choir official let the cat out of the bag when he said that "the culture of Wales seems to be changing." What he meant of course was that so many of the young are now hooked on cosmopolitan 'pop' that they are being alienated from their musical heritage. In the case of Welsh choral singing that is a very fine heritage indeed, and it is criminal that this should be allowed to happen.

Not that the Government would be concerned in the slightest. In accordance with its 'free market' principles, if 'pop' is what appeals to the young and makes more of a profit it must be allowed to drive out the Treorchy and Morriston Choirs. Thus do we allow junk to take over our cultural life.

The economy

THE RECOVERY THAT IS ALWAYS 'ROUND THE CORNER'

ON THE FRONT PAGE of the Sunday Telegraph on July 28th there was a report with a heading that we seem to have seen umpteen times recently. The report was about the national economy and the heading read 'Signs of recovery boost Tory spirits'.

Yes, it was another of these recoveries that are shortly about to happen but never do happen. They are the recoveries that dwell vividly in the Tory imagination as party spokesmen and spokeswomen sense that election time is not far off and that their beloved public is none too appreciative of all that they (the Tory politicians) have done for them. These recoveries are always just 'around the corner' – unseen by the poor ignorant voter but known about by the wise, the perceptive and the well-connected. So just what are the pointers to a recovery this time?

The Sunday Telegraph report opens by saying that "the Government is convinced that Britain is emerging from the recession and will see an economic upturn, possibly as soon as in the Autumn."

Possibly as soon as in the Autumn! Of course, if the great recovery does not come by then there will be further bright forecasts by Tory ministers, faithfully quoted in the Tory press, that the recovery will be coming "perhaps by the new year." And if that, in its turn, fails to happen, it will confidently and smugly predict that the recovery shows definite signs of arrival "by the Spring." And so on, ad nauseam.

So what are the signs which give rise to this hopeful speculation about an Autumn economic revival? According to the Sunday Telegraph:-

> "A new mood of optimism among ministers will be strengthened by today's publication of the Treasury's summer bulletin, which provides the clearest evidence yet that business fortunes are about to revive."

"Having reduced British industry to ruin, the politicians of the Old Gang are now desperately trying to hold onto their seats and their offices by talking about a coming 'upsurge' that exists only in the realm of their pathetic imaginations."

And what is the Treasury's evidence that such a revival is on the way? According to the ST report, it believes "that the recovery in consumer spending is overdue and that once it begins 'it could be quite strong.' "

Just like that! More hope. More speculation. More hypothesis. But no solid facts. Nothing indeed but a statement that a recovery in consumer spending "is overdue." This is rather like a punter at the races who, after backing a series of losers and being reduced to his last fiver, says that he must place one more bet because a change in his luck is 'overdue' – and by that token bound to come soon!

But the Sunday Telegraph thinks it has a bit more to go on than this. What it calls the Treasury's "unexpectedly upbeat assessment of the economic outlook" is something that it says...

> "...coincides with Whitehall figures showing that interest rate cuts mean payments on the average new mortgage in England and Wales of £44,000 are almost £100 a month less than at this time last year."

So what are we supposed to deduce from this? Why, that the average mortgagee has £100 a month more in his pocket. But is he spending it? Well, no – not yet actually. The Sunday Telegraph report has an explanation for this, however. "Most householders," it says, "have so far opted to save their cash but, with the growth in unemployment slowing down, ministers believe that consumers will soon begin spending again." Ah, here we are once more! "Ministers believe..." Again: no facts, no evidence, no positive or tangible indications – just belief. And of course it is the belief of ministers of the Government, those gentlemen of boundless optimism who have a general election now less than a year away and must be seen and heard to have faith in their own prescriptions – otherwise who else will?

THE IDLE THEORY

So far, it is all pure theory. The theory is that, with interest rates down, mortgagees are supposed to be better off. If this state of being better off is not yet evidenced by more spending on their part there has to be a reason for it that does not cast doubt on the supposition. The reason hinted at in the report is that many more people are unemployed than was the case a few months ago, when interest rates were higher, so that, while some have less to pay out on their mortgages, they also have less money coming as a result of being out of work. This last calculation is of course quite true: lower average expenditure on mortgages cancelled out by lower average income – indeed more than cancelled out because the loss of income through joblessness is going to be far greater than the saving on mortgages through lower interest rates.

So where are the signs of the recovery?

The Sunday Telegraph report can, it seems, do no better than to blurt out that, while unemployment is still increasing rapidly, its growth is "slowing down." And what is the evidence for this? No more than the fact that the rate of unemployment growth according to the last month's figures, was lower than that for the previous month. Such are the tiny straws at which the Government and its supporters are grasping.

THE BRUTAL REALITY

The truth is that none of this hopeful speculation can hide the brutal reality of Britain's economic position, which is that it is utterly appalling and shows all the signs now of getting worse.

In the economic fantasy world in which our politicians dwell, a national economy is viewed as something akin to the weather: a natural phenomenon over which political leadership has no real control. National leaders can only watch the skies, listen to the forecasts and speculate over the likely consequences of atmospheric trends – while all the time living on pure hope. But that is not how national economic success is built.

National economic success is built on positive action taken by a nation's leadership, and in the real world its signs are not something which exist around the corner: if they are there they can be seen – by everyone, within a relatively short time of their appearance.

They can be seen in the form of a visible monthly reduction in the numbers of those out of work. They can be seen in the form of factories, warehouses and shops opening instead of closing. They can be seen in the form of a manifest national outbreak of construction – everywhere. None of these signs exists at the present time, and they are not going to appear as long as present policies – or lack of them – prevail.

Our national 'leaders' ought to know this. Possibly, in their heart of hearts they do know it. But, unable to bring such conditions about, and frightened for their jobs, they will not admit such truths to the people.

Having reduced British industry to ruin, the politicians of the Old Gang are now desperately trying to hold onto their seats and their offices by talking about a coming 'upsurge' that exists only in the realm of their pathetic imaginations.

WHAT MUST BE DONE

When the nationalist revolution comes in Britain, and when we take over the reins of economic management, we will not need to buy popular support by promises, predictions, speculations, suppositions and hypotheses. We will demonstrate the success of our policies by visible proof of economic resurgence within a very short time of embarking on the task.

We will do it first and foremost by applying the principles of nationalism to the reconstruction of Britain – taking Japan as our model.

We will bring Britain out of the European Community and place import barriers against manufactured goods from Europe entering this country, as also against those from Japan and elsewhere. By this simple method, we will create millions of new jobs – jobs in British manufacturing, the key to our national prosperity in the past and in the future.

We will take a grip of Britain's financial institutions and make them work for this country, not for the international financiers and speculators. As part of this, we will feed into the national economy the money necessary to fuel industrial growth and consumer demand in the home market. We will provide this money, not as interest-bearing loans from the banking system but as interest-free credit from government and in a quantity that is equated to real national economic growth.

For our necessary imports of minerals and food we shall give trading preferences to Australia, New Zealand and Canada, using these in turn to negotiate reciprocal preferences for British exports in industrial products.

By these means we will bring about

'Race relations' now more important than rail safety?

THE LATEST REPORT from British Rail is that the organisation "wants to increase the number of people from ethnic minority groups – particularly Asian and Afro-Caribbean – in important jobs like train-driving." This report was made in a recent issue of a railway union newspaper.

The report goes on to say that "the move has been made following a claim to an industrial tribunal that the present testing arrangements are discrimin-atory."

BR maintains, the report ends, that "the tests are both justified and lawful, but it wants to make sure they are developed in the best possible way."

Developed in the best possible way – now just what is that supposed to mean? Cutting out the waffle, it can only mean that the tests for BR train-drivers are going to be changed in some way so as to make it possible for more members of the 'ethnic minor-ities' to pass them. In other words, the tests are going to be set to lower standards.

BR will no doubt hotly deny this, but it would seem to us that there is no other construction that can possibly be put on the matter when it is viewed by any rational person.

Standards required of train-drivers are of cardinal importance from the standpoint of public safety. Many millions of people travel by train in Britain every year. It is criminal that it is even contemplated compromising these standards merely in order to appease the demands of the noisy 'race relations' lobby.

We can only say that, if these standards are reduced as a result of easier train-drivers' tests, fewer and fewer people are going to want to travel by rail in this country – just at a time when the Government is urgently seeking to encourage more and more to do so, in order to improve the financial viability of the railways and reduce congestion on the roads.

Doesn't Britain get madder and madder?

BRITAIN'S RAILWAY COMMUTERS* Now it looks as if their lives are going to be put at further risk through the downgrading of train-driver tests, arranged by BR in order to recruit more 'ethnic minority' drivers.

CONTRARY to popular opinion, there is a race problem in Northern Ireland – a small problem as yet but still a problem. And there is real racial feeling in Ulster, believe it or not.

The accompanying news clipping appeared in* the Ulster Newsletter *in June. The race row stems from an Asian phoning the Belfast housing executive and hearing a conversation at the other end of the line about himself. He heard his people being called "a bunch of Pakis" and also heard one of the parties to the conversation say: "No wonder people in Bradford and Luton hate them."

Oh dear!

ULSTER NEWS LETTER

Race-row Moslem calls in supersleuth

NEWS LETTER correspondent

A SUPERSLEUTH is probing a race row which has rocked the Housing Executive.

The private investigator has already talked to several staff at the centre of claims that racist remarks were made within earshot of a shocked Moslem businessman.

The issue has also been taken up by Belfast councillor Margaret Crooks and is expected to be discussed at the executive's next full board meeting.

The businessman, who has asked not to be identified, hired the investigator after claiming that housing chiefs mounted a cover-up when he lodged a formal complaint.

He contacted them last month to make inquiries on behalf of four Kuwaitis who fled the Gulf. His phone call to District 7 offices in Belfast was supposedly put on hold — but he was able to hear every word.

And he claims a member of staff used phrases like "a bunch of Packies" and "no wonder people in Bradford and Luton hate them".

The businessman said: "The so-called investigation by the Housing Executive was a shambles.

"We have been able to establish that staff who were present during my phone call were not even interviewed. We are now seeking permission to talk to those staff.

"All along I have emphasised that I never before came across any instance of racism in Northern Ireland... and all along I have said an apology would suffice.

"The manner in which this has been handled by the Housing Executive is a disgrace. Theyt want us to go away but I am determined to get to the bottom of it and force them to act."

The executive insists the complaint was fully investigated and could not be supported. "If there is any new evidence then perhaps this gentleman could forward it to us," a spokesman added.

A member of staff at the district office in Victoria Street said yesterday: "This has caused a real stink. Memos have been flying like confetti and we've been told not to discuss it with anyone — particularly the Press."

ANNIHILATED IN THE TESTS

Lamb, Chris Smith and Grahame Hick, who though born overseas at least are the sons of British parents.

One of the reasons why the England selectors cannot get a decent team of British-born players together is that a number of would-be leading contenders are presently disqualified because they committed the awful 'crime' of going on a tour to South Africa against MCC orders. Were this ridiculous ban lifted, we might at least be able to muster a better test XI than at present.

This would not necessarily mean that a team comprised of white Englishmen (or at least Britons) would beat the West Indies. We have to admit that English cricket (largely because of the flooding of the county teams with overseas players) is not very strong at the moment.

But at least such a team would be one which cricket followers in this country could identify as their own and root for with genuine national pride. Also, it would be likely to have more of a sense of its own pride and team spirit — things which appear to have been abysmally lacking in recent matches.

So how about it, you cricket bosses? Why not pick a team of pure white Brits —including, if in the desired form, some of those who went to South Africa with Mike Gatting's party?

At the moment, we've simply nothing to lose. Or, to put it another way, things could not possibly get worse!

Separate payments please!

Will all those making payments to British Nationalist please keep these separate from those made to the British National Party.

Help these men!

In a blatant act of politically-motivated malice, the police have arrested and charged two good BNP activists. Michael Elphick was arrested at the party's Thamesmead march for doing literally nothing. He was fined £100 for allegedly being 'abusive'.

Ian Dell has been charged with threatening behaviour at the Al Sharpton meeting in London. Ian has so far incurred costs of £150 in legal fees.

Both of these men deserve our support. Please give generously and please give now. Mark all donation 'I & M' and send them to PO Box 117, Welling, Kent DA16 3DW.

prominent liberal spokesman contributed to the ruin of South Africa, does not propose to stay and fight against the evils that now so trouble him. The least he could do, one would have thought, having seen sense as he now appears to have done, would have been to put his undoubted brains at the service of his folk to repair some of the damage that he and his fellow liberals have done. He has the wherewithal in himself to occupy a leading position in the resistance to the growing ruination.

Instead, he now plans to do a bunk to Europe. But, as we could tell him, he won't escape the problems of the 'Third World' there either.

YORKSHIRE DIARY

Highly successful Bradford meeting

BRADFORD BRANCH of the British National Party staged its most successful meeting ever on July 7th, when BNP leader John Tyndall appeared as the main speaker.

Approximately 70 were in attendance, most of these from the Yorkshire Region and a goodly portion from Bradford itself. The other speaker was Regional Organiser Eddy Morrison, who gave a report on recent party progress in the region. The meeting was ably chaired by Deputy Regional Organiser Sid Carthew. Also of interest were the series of short local reports delivered by the various branch and group organisers — a custom recently introduced by Eddy Morrison.

The meeting was symbolic of the spectacular transformation that has been brought about in Yorkshire BNP in the past few months. Several new units have been inaugurated in the area, activities have been greatly on the increase and the party has hardly ever been out of the news.

Local Bradford Organiser is Bruce Barron, who has done great work in pulling a formerly moribund unit out of the doldrums and making it one of the fastest developing units in the country.

Halifax BNP gets moving

HALIFAX BNP is now well and truly on the move. Last month the party staged its first paper-sale in the town. The Yorkshire Regional Activist Corps was joined by a contingent from Rochdale (Lancs.) as well as two or three members from Manchester to make up a team of just over 40.

Moving to the main Halifax shopping precinct, the party activists sold dozens of papers and made a big impression on local folk.

Halfway through the sale a large group of young Asians turned up to size up the BNP team, no doubt with a view to making an attack on it. After spending nearly an hour wrestling with their fear, the Asians decided to leave — clearly overawed by the BNP's display of strength.

After a very successful paper-sale the BNP team refreshed themselves at a nearby watering hole. It was a full day, particularly for the Rochdale and Manchester activists, who had earlier held a similar sale in Rochdale — this being terminated when papers had been completely sold out well ahead of schedule!

Special announcement
MARCH AND RALLY, HALIFAX — SEPT. 21!

This is to inform all BNP activists that the party's Yorkshire Region has put in an application to the police for a march through Halifax on Saturday, September 21st, to be followed by a public rally. This will be the main public event staged by the BNP in the North of England in 1991, and it has been designated a NATIONAL ACTIVITY.

If police permission is not given for a march or if, in the event of permission initially being granted, the march is subsequently banned by order of the Home Secretary, the rally will nevertheless go ahead.

can have failed to see that public apathy over immigration is coming to an end. The British people are awakening from their ten-year doze and again demanding action, as they see that the Tories have ratted on all the promises they made at the time Mrs. Thatcher was heading for 10 Downing Street. Major & Co. cannot have failed to see that once again the nationalist movement — this time with the British National Party in the lead — is on the march, with bigger turnouts at demonstrations and rallies, with increased membership, with nationwide growth demonstrable monthly, above all with a vastly improved electoral performance, starting in London's East End and later spreading to the Midlands and North.

All this is profoundly worrying to Mr. Major.

LESSON FROM THATCHER

And that is why the not-long-installed Tory leader is now doing what Mrs. Thatcher did before him. Learning from her 1979 example, he is now making all the right noises on immigration, calling for 'controls' and 'curbs', even linking immigration with such things as drugs and crime — a linkage which is obvious to any observant member of the ordinary British public but which was deemed 'racist' heresy only a short time back by his party as much as by any of the opposition parties in parliament.

Of course, Mr. Major, when he speaks of the dangers of uncontrolled immigration, is not concerned, as we are, with the racial threat to Britain and to Europe.

He is concerned solely with the political threat to the Tory Party with a general election coming up, and with the possible political advantage to be gained in his appearing to take a 'tough' line on immigration, just as Maggie was appearing to be doing 12 years ago.

The Daily Mirror (no supporter of ours) recognised as much when in reporting Major's Luxembourg speech it said: "...it will be seen by some as a desperate ploy to strike a populist chord with the voters at home who are deserting the Tories."

Precisely! British Nationalist could not have put it better!

John Major is, in other words, trying just what his Tory predecessor tried in 1979: a cheap political 'con'. He is trying to deceive Britain's voters that, against all the evidence provided by his political career to date, he is now going to act 'tough' on immigration.

Britain's voters must not be conned this time as they were in 1979. We don't believe they will be. The Tory Government's record on immigration and race is abysmal. A far larger number of British people realise this today than realised it just five or six years ago. They realise that they have been lied to and deceived again, again and again by the Tories on the race issue.

That is why more and more of them are now coming over to the nationalist camp, to the BNP.

John Major is frightened out of his wits at what he sees happening. He has every reason to be.

Hence his weasel words in Luxembourg: a desperate stunt to halt the tide.

But a stunt that will fail.

CAMBERWELL ELECTION REPORT

BNP nearly beats Tories

THE COUNCIL BY-ELECTION for Southwark's vacant seat in Brunswick Ward of Camberwell produced stunning setbacks for the Labour and Tory Parties and a very encouraging result for the British National Party, which nearly beat the Tories and was at least partially instrumental in getting Labour kicked out.

Not only did the Labour Party lose the seat but the Tories, previously a strong second with 30 per-cent of the vote, slumped dramatically and barely avoided complete humiliation when the BNP just missed beating them by four votes.

The figures were: V. Maurice (Liberal Democrat) 1,076; B. White (Labour) 775; M. Bungay (Conservative) 135; S. Tyler (BNP) 132. Our own Steve Tyler's vote of 132 from a poll of 2,118 amounted to 6.23 percent of the total — a very creditable result in a racailly mixed ward. Nevertheless, even in this area the vote could have been improved by intensive canvassing. In actual fact, canvassing was negligible and the opportunity for boosting the BNP vote by a further three to six per-cent was lost.

It was only the BNP participation, though, that enlivened an otherwise dull election. One BNP leaflet slammed Labour by exposing blatant pro-black bias on the council. The effect of this was to open the way for the Liberal Democrat candidate as Labour and the Tories each lost 500 votes. By this time, the Communist Party candidate, Eric Hodson, had withdrawn from the election to avoid a humiliating defeat at the hands of the BNP.

BNP campaign tactics were hallmarked by intelligence and flexibility. There was, for instance, no application for any march or rally. Instead, the party decided on a mass leaflet drive, touring the estates with 80-100 members in procession, with many Union flags on display, and putting across the message with loudspeakers. As aimed for, on Saturday, July 20th the BNP totally dominated Brunswick Ward and stole a march on its opponents. Indeed, two days before polling day the Caribbean Times admitted that "the British National Party (BNP) caught community activists on the hop last weekend when they staged a 'Rights for Whites' march through the heart of South East London" (not a march actually, just a strong presence on the streets). Writing in the paper, Lee Jasper of the 'National Black Caucus' credited this to "the BNP's burgeoning ambition for political respectability." On the same day as the Caribbean Times appeared, the normally poisonous South London Press ran a by-election feature which came over quite well, quoting Steve Tyler as saying: "Under Labour, Camberwell has become a dangerous multi-racial slum."

The vote for Steve — over 6 per-cent of the poll in an area sandwiched between Brixton and Peckham — is, as said before, very creditable, and Steve is to be congratulated for standing at all. His result is all the more praiseworthy when it is borne in mind that a great many electors who would have preferred to vote BNP instead gave their votes to the Liberal Democrats because these provided the best chance of getting Labour out.

Once again, as with other recent results, the BNP has demonstrated that it can constantly achieve over 5 percent of the poll. While this shows that there is a long way to go still before the party can be among the contenders for seats, it does indicate that much progress has been made since two or three years ago, when 2 per-cent of the poll was the best that nationalist candidates could hope for. The trend is definitely upwards — may it continue!

Combining business with pleasure

THE WEEKEND starting Friday, July 5th, saw the holding of a British National Party Summer Camp. Restricted this year to East Midlands members only, the camp was an event which it is hoped will go national in the future.

The camp was held in the Lincolnshire seaside town of Skegness. Party members thoroughly enjoyed sleeping outside under the night sky.

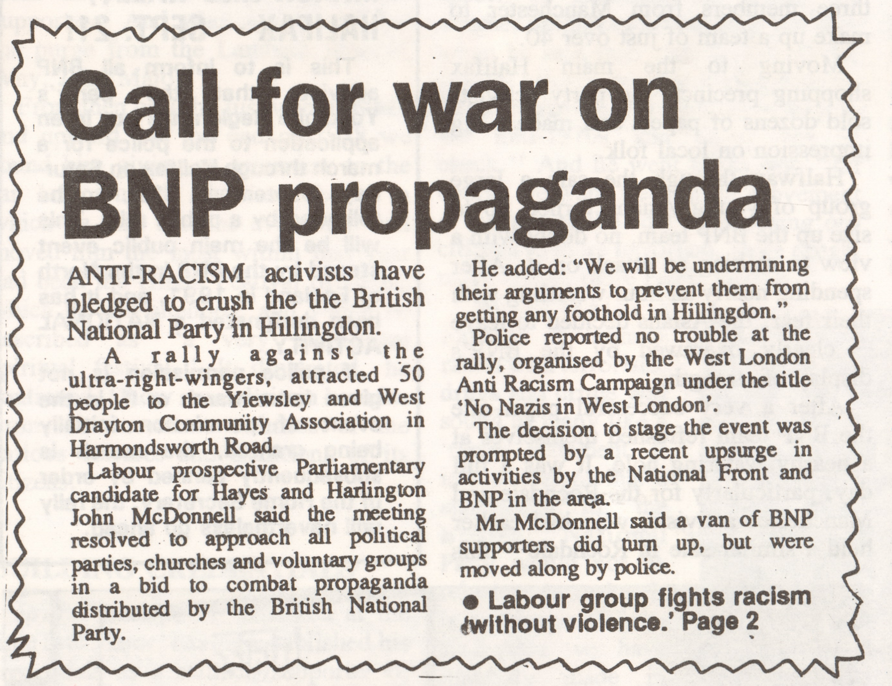
Saturday was spent visiting a marine zoo and comparing the beers at the Smuggler's Inn at Chapel St. Leonards, while Sunday was put to good use promoting the BNP with leaflet drives in Skegness, Wainfleet, Donington and Boston.

The good old British Summer ensured that it rained quite a bit of the time, but everyone enjoyed the event nevertheless.

WEST LONDON SURGE

ALL ACROSS West London, from Richmond to Hillingdon, the British National Party is experiencing a major surge in publicity and support. Very encouraging is the many new young recruits the party is attracting. Leafletting takes place every week with a regular turnout of 15-16 activists to bash out great numbers of leaflets spreading the BNP message. This is especially heartening when it is known how thin on the ground the party was in this part of London only a short time ago, with virtually no organised activity at all.

The BNP is committed to fighting at least one seat in West London in the general election, and we clearly have our enemies worried. Below is a paper clipping which shows that the local establishment is running scared from the BNP's message.



Call for war on BNP propaganda

ANTI-RACISM activists have pledged to crush the the British National Party in Hillingdon.

A rally against the ultra-right-wingers, attracted 50 people to the Yiewsley and West Drayton Community Association in Harmondsworth Road.

Labour prospective Parliamentary candidate for Hayes and Harlington John McDonnell said the meeting resolved to approach all political parties, churches and voluntary groups in a bid to combat propaganda distributed by the British National Party.

He added: "We will be undermining their arguments to prevent them from getting any foothold in Hillingdon."

Police reported no trouble at the rally, organised by the West London Anti Racism Campaign under the title 'No Nazis in West London'.

The decision to stage the event was prompted by a recent upsurge in activities by the National Front and BNP in the area.

Mr McDonnell said a van of BNP supporters did turn up, but were moved along by police.

NOTTINGHAM BRANCH TO FIGHT GENERAL ELECTION!

BOROUGH OF EREWASH WILL BE CONTESTED

At a meeting of East Midlands activists it has been decided that the Nottingham branch of the BNP, being one of the strongest branches in the region, will field a candidate in the next General Election.

The candidate will be Laurence Johnson, who recently stood as BNP candidate in Cotgrave, Notts. Mr Johnson scored 6.7% in that campaign, (the best BNP score in the country) and is hoping to repeat the success in the General Election. But he warns: "The General Election will be much harder to fight than the local election. For one thing we will be targeting more than ten times the number of households, and it will require a huge amount of effort - starting from now."

The Notts BNP has decided to contest the Erewash seat in the neighbouring county of Derbyshire, as there is a strong tradition of nationalist support in that area. The Notts group hopes to be assisted by other BNP activists from elsewhere in the east midlands, though it is likely that the effort will have to be shared as there will probably be a candidate in the Leicestershire area as well.

All the East Midlands BNP agree that the campaign must begin straight away. Laurence Johnson says: "We don't know for certain whether the election will be in October or whether it will be put back until next year. In either event we must be ready. We urgently need cash for the election fund, and above all, your help in distributing leaflets and selling newspapers. We aim to get over 5% of the vote, and thus retain the £500 deposit."

Nottingham gets Asian Sheriff

Nottingham's extreme left-wing Labour-Council has adopted a Pakistani immigrant as this year's Sheriff of Nottingham after last year's Sheriff was a West Indian.

A spokesman for Nottingham Residents Action Group said: "This decision is outrageous - what are foreign tourists going to think when they arrive to find an Asian is the Sheriff of Nottingham? (cont. p.2)
